CRACKING CRIBS.

How the Bold Burglars When Burgling Burgles The Safes and Houses.

The Bank Operative Hightoned an Not Disposed to Associate With Thieves.

What He Carries Around With Him His Nocturnal Tours For Plunder.

"All kinds of crime seems to run in streaks," said Detective Walters to an In-DEPENDENT reporter last night. "For instance, one murder is invariably followed by another, suicides come together, and burglaries and hold-ups always have a run in a city or town. Helena escapes the depredations of professional crooks as a general thing for the reason that it would be utterly impossible to commit a robbery of any magnitude here and escape. The thief is safest in the most thickly settled councillated and the settled councillated a try. Helena suffers from tramps. On one or two occasions there have been professionals in Helena, but they did not ply their trade. There is one thing to be remembered, and that is that western officers are well supplied with pictures and descrip-tions of notorious eastern crooks, and are always on the lookout for them. "I doubt if there has ever been a professional cracksman in the city. He can find as well filled safes back east to force and with better facilities for escaping. The practical safe-breaker is generally a me-chanic who has studied the latest mechani-cal inventions in his line and is as well posted as the maker himself as to the workings of the lock, which he finds no difficulty in forcing. No safe made but can be entered by burglars, provided a moderate length of time is given them in which to do their work.

"A house breaker is several degrees beways of getting into a house and the style is so marked that a detective having seen one bit of handiwork will have no difficulty is so marked that a detective having seen one bit of handiwork will have no difficulty in marking that man's work afterwards. Still others have a trick of crawling over transoms, coming down through skylights, shinning up the pillars of a porch and other methods known to the off color profession. "A bank burglar's kit of tools is something formidable to look at. The complete kit consists of air pump, putty, powder or dynamite fuse, sectional jimmy steel drills, diamond drills, copper and steel-faced sledges, lamp and blow-pipe, jack-screw, wedges, spring brace with box slide, feed screw drill, steel punches, small bellows, skeleton keys, nippers, dark lantern, twine blowing safes is known to everyone who has ever read anything.

"The favorite method of blowing a safe is by getting powder in the safe by means of an air pump. Holes are bored in the door of the safe both above and below. Some powder is held above and the air pump is worked from below. The powerful suction of the pump soon fills all the spaces with powder. The holes are puttied up and the fuse touched off. The noise of the explosion is deadened by the safe being wrapped in blankets.

"One of the most dangerous burglars is come a state, and as much to rejoice over wrapped in blankets.

"One of the most dangerous burglars is the key fitter, who, given an impression of any key, can make another to fit the same lock. He used to be in the employ of professional thieves, but now generally does business for himself, as he gnds he can find a place to rob as easily as any of the professionals and can gain access much quicker. Key fitterr generally haunt fur, silk or jewelry stores. Helena is lucky in not having any professional thieves."

FORT BENTON, May 24 .- [Special to the Independent.]-A party of twenty men under Engineer Dewar arrived this evening, having left Billings yesterday morning. Mr. Charles Harlowe, of the Northern Pacific, who has been here for two weeks past, will have charge of the party and will commence the work of locating the survey of the Benton & Billings branch to-morrow morning. Surveying instruments and material arrived some days ago, and teams and supplies have been secured at this point, so that there will be no delay in pushing operations. Benton business men are considerably elated to see active work commenced on this branch, although it was well known that operations would begin about this time. Advices regarding

The Elkhorn Branch. From present indications it would appear that Jefferson county will get a large share of the railroad building of this year. Work has already started on the Butte-Gallatin branch and hundreds of men who have been idle for several months are finding employment. A dispatch last week stated that the Elkhorn branch would be stated that the Eighnorn branch would be constructed this year, and this report is verified, as it is understood that the new line, which will be twenty miles in length. is to be relocated at once and that a sur-veying party has already been made up.
